The advisable sailing window in the Azores is from late March to October.
Fog is uncommon in the Azores, particularly in the summer.
Immediate weather conditions can be found at www.windguru.com or www.climaat.angra.uac.pt.

Climate

The Azores have privileged climatic conditions, with mild temperatures, due to the influence of the Gulf Stream, showing no major variations in air temperature throughout the year, reaching an average of 13oC (55oF) in winter and 23oC (73oF) in summer, whereas the water temperature remains between 18oC and 24oC (64oF and 75oF).

The climate in the Azores is dominated by the mid-Atlantic area of high pressure area which bears their name. The position of the Azores high varies with the season, being more northerly in the autumn and more southerly in the spring. In winter the area can be subject to bad weather periods and very wet days, while in the summer the Azores high pressure area can be stationary with prolonged periods of warm weather.

Tides

In the Azores the average tide range varies around 1.2 to 1.5 m.
The Azores Current usually flows south or southeast at no more than 0.5 knots on board of every yacht you will find a compilation of all published information for tides of the main harbours in the Azores.
